The human brain is very small and light (only two percent of our total weight) but it needs about 20% of the oxygen that our body takes in. We can't think well if our brain isn't getting enough oxygen, so always make sure there is enough oxygen in the air when you need to learn or remember something! A Scottish Summer Camp

Summer camps are becoming more and more popular with young people, but what are they like? Last month, a school reporter called Sally Henshaw travelled to Loch Lomond, Scotland, to find out.

"I've been travelling for ten hours," I thought when the minibus finally drove past a sign saying 'Welcome to Camp Lomond'. It was dark, and I just wanted to go indoors and jump into a nice, soft bed. However, the camp leaders had other ideas. We all had a barbecue, and then we sat around a campfire and talked. Finally, one of the leaders divided us into groups of three and said: 'Now it's time to put up your tents', I don't know how three of us managed to sleep in a tent the size of a single bed, but somehow we did. When we woke up the next day, my new friend Ingrid opened the front of the tent, and we all looked out. There was Loch Lomond. 'Loch' means 'lake' in Scottish, and Loch Lomond is one of the most beautiful places I've ever seen! That morning after breakfast, we went horse-riding around the lake.

In the next few days, the camp organized different activities. Most sports activities are in the afternoon, and in the morning, you can choose lessons like drawing, chess, drama and cookery. I've never been very good at art and I'm not a great actress-so I went along to the cookery class. I love food. The best things about the camp were learning new things and making new friends. Finally, since I came home, Ingrid and I have been texting every day.
