Hanan Al-Hroub, a poorly paid teacher in the West Bank, won the $1 million Global Teacher Prize for her "play and learn" method.

She uses a clown outfit, toys, and puppets, which she pays for with her own money, to make lessons fun. Her aim is to create a calm classroom where children forget daily struggles.

"We play first, and when we play we learn," she said. She uses videos and PowerPoint, and her eight-year-old pupils may not see an exercise book for the first month.

Parents often refuse the focus on play but this changes when they realise that her methods improve behaviour and academic results.

"No to violence" is her class motto. She plans to establish a foundation to train other teachers to follow her approach.

The Lincoln Elementary School held its yearly talent show. The committee worked hard to organize the event and praised all the students who participated. Many kids showed off their skills, hoping to win the big prize.

Sarah played the piano beautifully, while Tom told funny jokes that made everyone laugh. Maria wore a colorful outfit and danced to her favorite song. Some students struggled with stage fear, but their friends cheered them on.

The judges had a tough time choosing the winners because everyone did so well. In the end, they decided to give prizes to all participants. The principal smiled and said, "We don't focus on competition here. Everyone who tries their best is a winner!"

The students were happy and proud. They learned that it's not just about winning, but about having fun and supporting each other.
