Dear Stephen,

I am feeling really upset because I had a fight with my best friend. We have been friends since primary school and we are rarely apart. I would say we are more like brothers. We played football together in the same team. We always dreamt to be engineers. We both want to do the same course at university, and because we want to stay together, we applied to the same university in London. However, I was accepted for the course there, and he failed to join the same university. I really want to do the course but I feel really guilty about it. Ever since he knew that he couldn't achieve his goal, he has been really depressed. He is constantly picking fights with me over little things, and now he says he feels disappointed because I've accepted the offer. Please, can you help me?
