Light Initiative started with two volunteers and now it includes more than 350. They record school and college books for visually impaired people. They started recording the books of the 9th and 12th grades; they also record university books and references. Their aim is meeting visually impaired people's needs. A visually impaired person contacts the initiative administration and provides them with the books needed. The initiative divides the books into tasks for volunteers to record. They use a Facebook page to announce finished books and a YouTube channel to publish the recordings in mp3 format. Their services are free for both volunteers and people with sight problems. Anyone with internet access can use their recordings. Volunteers use simple tools like mobile phones and laptops. Now, they are turning the Syrian curriculum into Braille.

Composition:

I started a cleanup project to make our neighbourhood cleaner and healthier. Every weekend, I gather my friends to pick up trash from the streets and parks. We also plant flowers and trees to make the area more beautiful. It feels great to know that we are helping people live better lives.
